Gay people's future in india 1 I so regret not taking science or commerce stream in 11th grade. These two streams helps to go to foreign countries and get jobs there. I have nightmares about Bangladeshi 'Miya's taking over India and destroying whatever rights gay people have in India. In Assam they openly threatening local Assamese population. I don't feel safe until Bangladeshi immigrants problem is solved. But because of vote bank politics political parties only care about appeasement.. ■	LGBTindia	Raj_Dutta3731	NEGATIVE	critical	0	2026-01-13 13:57

Learn about the global economy over the past year 1 Let's break down what the hell happened. Trump's Tariff War 2.0: It's Not Just China Anymore Remember Trump's first trade war? This one, 2.0, is on a whole other level. Instead of just targeting China, it's an "all-out brawl" with pretty much everyone. Trump calls it a "universal tariff." On April 5th, a 10% baseline tariff hit almost all imports. Then came the so-called "reciprocal tariffs": • China: 34% • EU: 20% • Japan: 24% • India: 26% • Vietnam: 46% Trump dubbed the day he signed the order "Liberation Day." The markets, however, felt anything but liberated. They freaked out. Stocks and even U.S. bonds plummeted, which really got the government's attention. The bond market is the one thing you don't mess with. This forced them to pause the new tariffs for 90 days, telling everyone, "Let's talk." So, what was the point ...	stocks	Ok_Basket4862	NEGATIVE	critical	1	2026-01-13 13:53
Pakistan Is Run by a Discount Military. India Is Being Run by Discount Corporations 5 Pakistan is often described as a country with an army and a flag. The military runs the economy, media, courts, and foreign policy. Civilian governments are decorative. Everyone understands this, including Pakistanis. By "discount military", I mean a military that exercises maximum political and economic control while delivering minimum professional outcomes. India is drifting toward a parallel model, just with better branding. Replace generals with boardrooms. Replace khaki with pinstripes. Replace martial law with electoral legitimacy. The outcome is structurally similar. Pakistan's problem is military supremacy. India's emerging problem is corporate supremacy under ideological cover. Under the Bharatiya Janata Party and its parent ecosystem Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh, power is being ...	india	Quiet_Form_2800	NEGATIVE	critical	0	2026-01-13 13:26
Urgent: College withholding marks card for pending fees, job offer at risk legal options? 3 I am 30 years old and after many struggles in life, I am finally about to receive a job offer. This opportunity honestly means everything to me. I am not coming from privilege, and it has taken me years to reach this point. However, my college is now blocking my future. I completed my course, but due to financial difficulties, my tuition fee is still partially pending. Because of this, the college is refusing to give me my marks card. What's worse is that they are not even allowing me to take a photocopy or a photo of the marks card, nor are they issuing a bonafide, provisional certificate, or course completion letter. The employer has asked for basic educational documents for onboarding. Without at least some proof, my job offer may be cancelled. I am not refusing to pay my dues I fully intend ... Swiggy Investors: Unions and Politics are BS 8 Government is involved because AAP MP Raghav Chadha wants votes from 10 lakh delivery partners. Now they push fake 10-minute delivery ads. Truth: Most take 15-20 minutes. Useless! Blinkit, Zepto, and Instamart do the same quick commerce game. They change rules anytime. Swiggy probably pays politicians. Swiggy shares started losing price. That's when I thought this and bought 1729 Swiggy shares one of Indias biggest quick commerce and food delivery apps. Still holding. Politics ruining it? It is on this humble note that I urge our Hon'able Prime Minister to take cognizance of the valiant efforts of our beloved Ed-Tech teachers who have served assiduously for the empowerment and upliftment of students, regardless of their financial background, religion and other identities. Mann Ki Baat, Yoga Day, Ram Mandir: Inside Modi govt's media advisory playbook 1 Government advisories to TV channels have surged under Modi and shifted from guidelines about ethics to instructions on what to cover and how. In 2002, Narendra Modi sat across Jill McGivering from the BBC for an interview. It was shortly after the Gujarat riots, and McGivering asked Modi what he could have done differently. Modi's response has become widely quoted as the biggest lesson he's learned during his journey from chief minister to prime minister: "One area where I was very, very weak, and that was how to handle the media." Twenty-three years later, Modi has arguably mastered the media. And an interesting way to scrutinise what his government wants to see in the media – and what it doesn't – is through the media advisories issued by the Ministry of Information and Broadcasting (MIB). India faces another US tariff hike as Trump announces 25% levy on Iran's trade partners 8 United States President Donald Trump on Monday said that a tariff rate of 25% will be imposed on goods from countries doing business with Iran. The action against Tehran came as anti-government protests in the West Asian country entered their third week. While China is Iran's largest trading partner, India has been among the top five countries with which Tehran has had trade ties in recent years. Without a trade deal with Washington, Indian goods are already facing a combined US tariff rate of 50%. A 25% so-called reciprocal duty was imposed on August 7, followed by an additional 25% punitive levy on August 27. It's insane that the government has killed US citizens over private firearms that were not used to commit crimes. Immigration - This is where most people would have a problem with me. So, I'll devote more words to it. As a kid, I never thought about immigration at all. But, after immigration changed the face of my neighborhood (and the cities around it), I started to feel a sense of cultural alienation and reconsidered the issue more in-depth. This led me to where I am now. First of all, I don't support illegal immigration, sanctuary cities, or "abolish ICE" narratives; I think that nations need to have borders (no borders = no nation). What must change for India to realistically enter the global academic elite — and who is responsible for making that change? 3 India has one of the largest higher education systems in the world. Yet not a single Indian university consistently appears in the global top 100 across major rankings like QS, THE, or Shanghai. This feels paradoxical, especially when we frequently invoke: * 75+ years of independence * Nalanda–Takshila legacy * The "Vishwaguru" narrative * Over a decade of a strong, centralised government So the question isn't emotional anymore — it's structural: Where are we actually falling short? Is this: * A failure of governance? * A funding problem? * An autonomy problem? * Or a cultural issue in how we treat research, dissent, and academia? If we truly aspire to global leadership in knowledge, shouldn't at least a few institutions reflect that ambition?	CriticalThinkingGlobalBreakingBadNESG		NEGATIVE	critical	0	2026-01-13 14:04

What if a healthier workday actually started later? (10-4 concept) 0 It's actually wild that we've normalized giving our best brain and body hours to employers and then expecting people to "live" on the leftovers after 6pm. We act like it's normal for a human being to wake up—immediately accelerate into performance—commute, produce, comply, stay "on," manage stress, and hold it together... and then, once the best energy is spent, we tell them, "Now go be healthy. Now go be present. Now go be creative. Now go build relationships. Now go make a meaningful life." As if the most important parts of being human are supposed to fit neatly into the smallest, most depleted slice of the day. But the body doesn't work like that. Privatization of roads and public transport 1 I'm from a small country, the Netherlands. The Netherlands is basically full as fuck. We have high-quality roads, I would dare to say some of the best in the world. However, the road tax is also ridiculously high. Besides that, the government taxes the shit out of fuel too. Traffic jams are very common on most major highways during peak hours. I am not denying that there is a lot of money being sent down the drain with public spending on things such as roads or public transport. However, I fail to imagine how a complete privatization of the roads or public transport that doesn't involve the government could improve the situation, since obviously, roads or public transport aren't a completely free market or not even a free market at all. What are the worst races you've ever watched? 131 Sometimes a race comes and goes from your memory, but there are also times where a race was so bad, it will forever remain in my memory. Here are some of my least favourites: 2013 Belgian Grand Prix: The qualifying for this was so exciting, and yet the race was just Sebastian Vettel dominating from start to finish. The only real highlight for me was that Maldonado somehow crashed into both Force Indias on the same corner. It also didn't help that I was watching this race live in the USA at the time, so I basically stayed up all night for nothing. 2014 Austrian Grand Prix: It's amazing how Austria has become one of the most reliable tracks for great racing, considering how bad the first race was on its reintroduction to the calendar. Having interacted with many people from other states like UP-Bihar, I have observed that their motivation for corruption is very high. Plus the Bureaucracy from other states have repeatedly lobbied for relaxation of section 118. During the Jairam government in 2021, many permission for 118 were granted to bureaucracy against the rules. Government employees from other states are allowed to buy land upto 500sq metres to build a house after completing 30 years of service in the state. Indian standards need uplifting! 16 I've been staying in Ireland for a couple years now and and something I keep noticing is how much higher the everyday safety standards are compared with India. Take roadworks as an example. This is how arrangements are made on roads even for minor repairs. A fenced perimeter is made around the area, roads are cordoned off from a distance so that cars don't have to turn back and even temporary kerb ramps are put in place for strollers or wheelchair users to get on and off the footpath. In India, the picture is often very different. Half-built flyovers are left without barricades, manholes are left uncovered and people are left to watch out for themselves. This is not even about saving costs or corruption since it costs next to nothing to put up a makeshift fence. This attitude of "chalta hai" and "jugaad" that we have cultivated and are proud of, ... There is no rule of law in India 6 India is more anarchic than USA or China. Among the three countries with the largest populations, India is most lawless. The legal system is understaffed and corrupt. Thus we don't want a rule of law. When the same laws are not objectively applied to everyone. Therefore unfortunately people take the law into their hands. Like the authorities work with the local community to enforce their rules. This is also not acceptable. When different rules are applied to different people, and the rules are kept secret, and are not stable. How can anarchy solve these problems? Can we use force to defend ourselves? How We Got Here and Where We Go From Here 1 TLDR Below. After watching our political system devolve for years on end, I'm left with a conclusion I keep arguing with myself about. But I'm also increasingly resigned to the possibility that we may need some kind of separation, or at least a negotiated, gradual process where parts of the country leave amicably. Not because it's clean or good, but because I don't know what reconciliation even means anymore when we don't share facts, we don't share trust, and we don't share a basic understanding of what legitimate government is. A Simplified History of the Indian Subcontinent 0 The first humans in the Indian subcontinent came from Africa. Many thousands of years later, Iranians arrived and interbred with them. Out of this emerged the Indus civilisation, one of the oldest civilisations in the world. Over time, it declined, as power is never eternal and always shifts. At that stage, Aryans from Eastern Europe arrived. They were superior to the declining civilisation, and so the Indus civilisation was absorbed into the Aryan, creating a new civilisation which was a synthesis of the two, known as the Dharmic civilisation. Interbreeding also took place during this period. Many years later, those in positions of power established the caste system, which became the largest institutionalised form of racism in human history. Those with higher Aryan bloodlines were placed in the upper castes, while those with a greater ...	EuroAsianMix	Accurate-Self7608	NEGATIVE	critical	0	2026-01-09 18:56

Religion and Political Theory 1 when a belief system becomes law, it ceases to function as belief in any meaningful philosophical sense. in iran, a fundamentalist interpretation of islam was transformed into state power, and conscience was replaced by coercion. faith was no longer voluntary but enforced through punishment, surveillance, and violence. what was demanded was not conviction, but submission. this collapse of belief into obedience destroys moral agency. a person cannot be said to freely believe when refusal carries the threat of imprisonment or death. religion, once fused with absolute power, becomes an instrument of domination rather than a system of meaning. for many of us who escaped this system, the problem does not end in exile. in western societies that claim to value free inquiry, speaking critically about religious authoritarianism is often treated as moral ...	philosophy	nerdose	NEGATIVE	communal	0	2026-01-13 14:01
Stand with Iran not Islamophobia 0 I am so sick of right-wing media using what's happening in Iran as an excuse to launder Islamophobia. "See? Even people over there hate Islam." No. Shut up. That's not what's happening and you know it. People in Iran aren't risking their lives because they woke up one day and decided they hate a religion. They're fighting an authoritarian theocracy that controls their bodies, their speech, their futures, and their dissent through state violence wrapped in religious justification. They don't hate faith. They hate being ruled by it. Americans love to forget this, but separation of church and state is not universal. It's foundational here. In Iran, religion is the government. You don't get freedom of belief, you get obedience. You don't get pluralism, you get clerics deciding how you live or whether you're allowed to live at all. It throws everything at them—dead parents, spousal deaths, illness, hunger, humiliation—and then sits back to watch the show. In the case of Braja Mohan Senapati, poverty made an error. It assumed the boy would break. The boy who would become Fakir Mohan Senapati, the father of modern Odia literature, began life as an unwanted burden. Father Lakshmana Charan passed away when he was barely one and half years old. His mother died soon after. The only person standing between him and oblivion was his grandmother, Kuchila Dei. The action against Tehran came as anti-government protests in the West Asian country entered their third week. While China is Iran's largest trading partner, India has been among the top five countries with which Tehran has had trade ties in recent years. Without a trade deal with Washington, Indian goods are already facing a combined US tariff rate of 50%.
