| Why the whole South Asian subcontinent is at a Breaking Point of Hate through religion, political ideology, identity etc. 23 >English subtext": The situation in Pakistan has deteriorated significantly over the past several years. Roughly thirty to forty years ago, politicians there decided that they would cultivate terrorists within madrasas. This marked the beginning of the Taliban; the word "Taliban" itself is derived from the word Talim, which means education, and refers to a student. These madrasa students were called the Taliban, and the movement escalated to the point where they now govern Afghanistan. Today, there is an outcry throughout Pakistan as the nation reaps the harvest of the radicalization it once sowed. Any country that sows the seeds of extremism will face a fate similar to Pakistan's within thirty to forty years.* >*This collapse could happen even faster now ... | CriticalThinkingOldDragonfruit-9783 | OldDragonfruit-9783 | NEGATIVE | communal | 2 | 2026-01-11 05:05 |

| YouTube Recommendations 6 I am seeking new Independent journalists, Geopolitical Dialogue channels, Recorded lecture repositories from prominent historians, economists and diplomats and even what people use as their state sponsored mediums they observe. I found that my journey into history really took off once I adjusted my algorithm feeds last year and built a pretty nice algorithm set to get rational and objective and intelligent information about current events and history and Economics. So here's my recommendations. If these are in your feeds already, then I'd really like to hear from you about great history channels for communism, socialism and Marxist history. Then great dialogue channels. As well as who your Independent Journalists are. And finally , what main stream you spectate. I've been married for over eight years (married in 2017). I was 23 at the time; my husband is about five years older than me. We have one living child, and I recently lost a pregnancy under traumatic circumstances. From the very beginning of our marriage, my husband has never slept next to me. I have slept alone in a bed for eight years. Initially, he said the bed was too firm and that he preferred the couch. At the time, I told myself this was just a difference in personality and that we dont have to have identical personalities. I minimized it. | Saw people washing socks/shoes in a crystal-clear stream near Titlis. Is this acceptable in Switzerland? 3 I live in New Zealand, and this was my first overseas trip since moving from India. I'm asking this as a Swiss etiquette / environmental norms question. Near the Titlis / Engelberg base area, I saw a group of 15+ fellow Indian tourists using a crystal-clear alpine stream like a wash station: rinsing shoes, washing socks, and a bit of clothing. Context: there was snow up on the mountain and some mud/slush around, so I get why someone would want to clean up. But seeing laundry and footwear being washed directly in that stream felt wildly out of place. In NZ/Aus (in my experience), people are pretty hands-off with natural waterways, especially anything that might add detergents/dirt/microfibres. Questions for locals / regular hikers: 1. | The Server Room Siege: When a Raid Became a Street Fight for India's Political Future 0 KOLKATA—At 10:30 AM on a Thursday, the whir of server fans on the fourth floor of a building in central Kolkata was drowned out by a different kind of buzz. Officials from India's Enforcement Directorate (ED), armed with a search warrant, had arrived at an office linked to the Indian Political Action Committee (I-PAC). Their stated target: evidence in a long-running money laundering case linked to an alleged coal smuggling syndicate. What they found instead was West Bengal's most powerful politician physically blocking the doorway. Chief Minister Mamata Banerjee's dramatic, personal intervention—arriving at the raid site with a phalanx of her own police—wasn't just political theater. | "No scope in biotech" and other myths 1 Apologies for the clickbait title■ I have been seeing a lot of posts from students confused about degrees like biotech and usually there's at least one template comment telling them to not do it because there are no jobs for BSc/MSc graduates. As someone who has been on this path for more than a decade now, I thought I should share my experience and thoughts in this area. Some of it might apply to BSc/MSc programs in general but I am much more familiar with Biotech than any other discipline. Why instant negative judgment on BSc? I see a lot of negativity around this career path and it is often looked down upon. I think a major issue right now is that no one is doing these courses willingly. I'm considering going back to university for a bachelor's degree in Microbiology, with the goal of eventually getting into drug R&D; through a master's and then a PhD. That's my backup plan. My primary goal is to maintain a competitive GPA so I can apply to medical school—assuming I score well on the GAMSAT, which is the Australian medical entrance exam. I dream of moving to a country like Australia to escape how conservative things are here. I want a secure career that reduces the risk of unemployment due to layoffs. | Asking Grok, Are people cancelling their World Cup 2026 tickets because of ICE activity? 0 Yes, there are reports and growing calls indicating that some people—primarily international fans—and at least one high-profile individual—are cancelling their FIFA World Cup 2026 tickets due to concerns over U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) activities and broader safety fears related to immigration enforcement under the current administration. This stems from a recent high-profile incident: On January 7, 2026, an ICE agent fatally shot a woman named Renee Good during a migration operation in Minneapolis. This event has sparked widespread outrage, protests, and renewed criticism of aggressive immigration policies, including fears of arbitrary detentions, lack of due process, or even violence toward visitors perceived as "foreign" or from certain ... | boycottworldCup126-Biscotti-9153 | | NEGATIVE | call-to-action | 2 | 2026-01-11 05:42 |
| Why I Find It Hard to Believe in God, Personally 8 Even if we grant the assumption that God exists, it does not follow that any particular religion is true. The existence of a god and the correctness of a specific religious doctrine are entirely different claims. When we look at religion not through faith but through probability, history, and human disagreement, a striking conclusion emerges. The chance that any one person has chosen the correct religion is extremely small. Across our history, there have been thousands of religions, estimates range from roughly 4,000 to over 10,000, depending on how one counts sects and traditions. Within the major religions themselves, fragmentation is immense. Christianity alone contains hundreds of denominations. Islam has dozens of sects. Moitra, who was also detained during a protest in Delhi, termed the ED's action "pure and simple political loot, political robbery and political espionage." Colonised by Spain for 300 years, and then colonised by USA for 50 years. Their labour is exploited and their wealth is extracted via imperialism. In order to sustain imperialism without protest back home, it's important to sell the idea to your own citizens in USA/CANZUK that they're superior and the people you're exploiting/oppressing (Filipinos in this case) are subhuman. Next, if you feed Filipinos propaganda that they are ugly for 350 years, they'll start to believe it. Tell them their noses are flat and their eyes are too small and that their skin is too dark. One may collectively hoist the flag or display it individually, but acknowledgment of the land on which one stands must be non-negotiable. This principle should extend to all forms of social gatherings, whether peaceful protests, rallies, roadshows, or festival celebrations. | Defanging Determinism: Causation, Who's Doing It? 5 The universe contains objects which exert force upon other objects, causing changes in the state of things. All the objects are made of physical matter, organized in different ways. Matter organized as inanimate objects include things like quarks, electrons, protons, atoms, molecules, planets, stars, and galaxies. The behavior of Inanimate objects is governed by physical forces. Place a bowling ball on a slope and it will always roll downhill. This is physical causation. Matter organized as living organisms include things like viruses, bacteria, plants, and animals. While still affected by physical forces, their behavior is governed by biological drives to survive, thrive, and reproduce. Behaviors that served that purpose became instinctual. | How is India wrong in navigating foreign policy and defence capabilities? India's multi-alignment foreign policy which is often praised as strategic autonomy has aimed to balance relations with major powers like the US, Russia, China while pursuing national interests. However as of January 2026, this approach has shown significant vulnerabilities, arguably backfiring in several critical domains, particularly energy security, defence modernization, and regional deterrence. # Energy Security and the Russian Oil Bet India's diversification of oil imports toward Russia post 2022 Ukraine conflict initially yielded economic benefits through discounted crude, shielding the economy from global price spikes. I am from the UK and Indians are incredibly disliked here, and across the Western hemisphere. Whilst there is no doubt racism plays its part, but that's not the full explanation. On a surface level, in my opinion, the following reasons cause this dislike: 1. Support for Israel despite the Western consensus of a genocide being committed. In the West, this is seen as nothing more than deep anti-Muslim hatred. 2. Recent images of Indian (Hindu) men destroying anything related to Christianity during Christmas. 3. | Nepal politics - what do we need to understand? Part 2 2 Previously, I wrote a post in this group outlining my views on politics. It seems many readers did not fully grasp my position, and some responded with personal attacks. However, given recent shifts in global geopolitics (US attack on Venezuela, India buying more gold, China keeping quiet) and the fact that much of the Nepalese media does not address what I consider to be the core issues, I think it is necessary to clarify the arguments I raised earlier and connect them to recent political developments in Nepal. I will begin with the Western education model. My argument is not against education itself. It is against how the Western education system, and its underlying assumptions, are imported and treated as universally correct. In the previous post, this distinction was misunderstood. | Assessing Cult Characteristics: The Dawoodi Bohra Community 2 Introduction The Dawoodi Bohras are a sub-sect of Isma'ili Shia Islam with roughly one million followers worldwide. Historically centered in Gujarat (India) and now spread across South Asia, the Middle East, East Africa, Europe, North America, and Australia, the community is often described by critics as tightly organized, highly insular, and defined by intense devotion to a single spiritual leader, the Syedna, formally titled the Dīnī al-Mutlaq (the "Absolute Missionary"). The allegation made by critics is not simply that the Bohras are devout or communal, but that the community's structure and enforcement mechanisms resemble a high-control system, with coercive obedience, fear-based conformity, and severe penalties for dissent. | Hizb ut-Tahrir calls to 'organise a state' as pressure to ban group mounts 109 Hizb ut-Tahrir operatives have told a Sydney audience that the West sucks blood from humanity, that sharia law is the blueprint of a harmonious society, and that Islam is the only solution for "Muslims and non-Muslims alike". It comes amid mounting calls to ban the organisation, with Coalition's home affairs spokesman Jonathon Duniam declaring the group's controversial November conference in southwest Sydney should have not have gone ahead, labelling it "simply unacceptable" that the federal government did not step in to stop it. The group's national conference, held just three weeks before the Bondi terror attack, puts further pressure on the Albanese government, which is facing calls to list Hizb ut-Tahrir as a terror group, as it has been in the UK. | A Simplified History of the Indian Subcontinent 0 The first humans in the Indian subcontinent came from Africa. Many thousands of years later, Iranians arrived and interbred with them. Out of this emerged the Indus civilisation, one of the oldest civilisations in the world. Over time, it declined, as power is never eternal and always shifts. At that stage, Aryans from Eastern Europe arrived. They were superior to the declining civilisation, and so the Indus civilisation was absorbed into the Aryan, creating a new civilisation which was a synthesis of the two, known as the Dharmic civilisation. Interbreeding also took place during this period. Many years later, those in positions of power established the caste system, which became the largest institutionalised form of racism in human history. Those with higher Aryan bloodlines were placed in the upper castes, while those with a greater ... | EuroAsianMixX | Accurate-Self7603 | NEGATIVE | critical | 1 | 2026-01-09 18:56 |

As someone who has been on this path for more than a decade now, I thought I should share my experience and thoughts in this area. Some of it might apply to BSc/MSc programs in general but I am much more familiar with Biotech than any other discipline. Why instant negative judgment on BSc? I see a lot of negativity around this career path and it is often looked down upon. I think a major issue right now is that no one is doing these courses willingly. Because BSc is relatively cheap and less demanding, people join it while they prepare for other competitive exams or they join it after they have ... |

The existence of a god and the correctness of a specific religious doctrine are entirely different claims. When we look at religion not through faith but through probability, history, and human disagreement, a striking conclusion emerges. The chance that any one person has chosen the correct religion is extremely small. Across our history, there have been thousands of religions, estimates range from roughly 4,000 to over 10,000, depending on how one counts sects and traditions. Within the major religions themselves, fragmentation is immense. Christianity alone contains hundreds of denominations. Islam has dozens of sects. | 2026-01-11 01:04 | india | No_Apricot6965 | 0 | critical | I am from the West - Indians are severely disliked here 18 Are Indians aware of how severely disliked they are in the West? I am from the UK and Indians are incredibly disliked here, and across the Western hemisphere. Whilst there is no doubt racism plays its part, but that's not the full explanation. On a surface level, in my opinion, the following reasons cause this dislike: 1. Support for Israel despite the Western consensus of a genocide being committed. In the West, this is seen as nothing more than deep anti-Muslim hatred. 2. Recent images of Indian (Hindu) men destroying anything related to Christianity during Christmas. 3. Indian men having a reputation for harassing women, and it being unsafe in India for female tourists, especially white Western females. 4. Rape cases that filter through to Western news. 5. Poor hygiene of India as a whole, in particular the ... |

It seems many readers did not fully grasp my position, and some responded with personal attacks. However, given recent shifts in global geopolitics (US attack on Venezuela, India buying more gold, China keeping quiet) and the fact that much of the Nepalese media does not address what I consider to be the core issues, I think it is necessary to clarify the arguments I raised earlier and connect them to recent political developments in Nepal. I will begin with the Western education model. My argument is not against education itself. It is against how the Western education system, and its underlying assumptions, are imported and treated as universally correct. In the previous post, this distinction was misunderstood. To explain this properly, let's dive into ... |

I've spent most of my life in church, and I'm watching our faith kill itself. Not because of atheists. Not because of secular culture. Because of us. Because we've become so allergic to truth that we've replaced it with two dangerous alternatives: fundamentalist dogmatism on one side, progressive slush on the other, with a huge amount of nominal Christians in the middle who can't tell the difference and don't really care. Let me tell you what I mean, because I'm not speaking in abstracts here. I'm talking about real churches, real people, real damage. I grew up in a fundamentalist church where the pastor spent forty-five minutes every Sunday explaining why dinosaur bones were either Satan's deception or flood debris. I must have grown up, because I felt like I was reading something for an early grade-schooler. No serious discussions of fascism, colonization, indoctrination, gender roles and how they tie to honor, the fact that Zuko seemingly let all the bad people off scot-free and is holding onto absolute power just like his father (Zuko is the "good authoritarian"), etc. That said, I will still happily beat the drum that the portrayal of mental illness as it pertains to Azula is ableist and misogynistic and has no place in a franchise for children, as I think her treatment by the narrative and the fandom stands in stark contrast to the themes of redemption, ... |

Historically centered in Gujarat (India) and now spread across South Asia, the Middle East, East Africa, Europe, North America, and Australia, the community is often described by critics as tightly organized, highly insular, and defined by intense devotion to a single spiritual leader, the Syedna, formally titled the Dīnī al-Mutlaq (the "Absolute Missionary"). The allegation made by critics is not simply that the Bohras are devout or communal, but that the community's structure and enforcement mechanisms resemble a high-control system, with coercive obedience, fear-based conformity, and severe penalties for dissent. In sociological and psychological literature, "cult" (or more precisely "high-control" ...) |

It comes amid mounting calls to ban the organisation, with Coalition's home affairs spokesman Jonathon Duniam declaring the group's controversial November conference in southwest Sydney should have not have gone ahead, labelling it "simply unacceptable" that the federal government did not step in to stop it. Many thousands of years later, Iranians arrived and interbred with them. Out of this emerged the Indus civilisation, one of the oldest civilisations in the world. Over time, it declined, as power is never eternal and always shifts. At that stage, Aryans from Eastern Europe arrived. They were superior to the declining civilisation, and so the Indus civilisation was absorbed into the Aryan, creating a new civilisation which was a synthesis of the two, known as the Dharmic civilisation. Interbreeding also took place during this period. Many years later, those in positions of power established the caste system, which became the largest institutionalised form of racism in human history. Those with higher Aryan bloodlines were placed in the upper castes, while those with a greater ... |

| 2026-01-06 04:49 | WIAH | maproomzibz | 9 | critical | What are your controversial alternate history opinions? 6 Here's mine: \- if Byzantines survived into modern day, it would eventually become some kind of Eastern European dictatorship, or some kind of corrupt low trust society country like modern day Greece, not some glorious country. And Westerners would continue to bash it as a backward place. \- Korea would've been better off without Korean War and North conquering it all. \- Al-Andalus, if it survived, would not go to America and colonize it, like the Spanish did. \- Alexander the Great would not be able to conquer India if he survived, (India already had a competent ruler, Chandragupta, and their empire to Macedonia would be like Persia and Rome). \- All AHs that include Rome magically expanding more and more, (and even worse colonizing America) are all boring and unrealistic (and then the same classical culture with same ... |

(fun fact, Saudi Arabia is a strong US ally, who is also partially responsible for helping commit the Genocidal acts in Yemen) I support the ethnic minorities and other people of Sudan who are being subject to unimaginable atrocities by the UAE funded RSF, as well as being betrayed by their own Sudanese army (fun fact, Israel is a strong ally of the UAE, and made over a billion dollars worth of arms deals with them right before the Sudanese Genocide restarted in 2023) I support the people of the Eastern DR Congo who are being subject to unimaginable atrocities by the Rwandan funded M ... |

The main reason • China is encircling Taiwan • In 2027, China will commemorate the 100th anniversary (Centenary) of the People's Liberation Army (PLA) • Xi Jinping has said his generals to have Taiwan as part of China by 2027. • 40% of Chinas heavy crude oil imports is from.... U guessed it.... Venezuela.... • Think of how huge China and its population military • If USA hold venezuelas heavy crude oil supply and stops supply to them, it's gonna cost China a lot more and harder for them if war starts 2 Secondary reason • Venezuela is not a democracy, it's an authoritarian state • Means a dictator and his military and intelligence organization is running the country, not the people • USA is coming to bring democracy to ... |

Citizens are directly engaging in combat with regime forces and taking prisoners. The protests are lead by the younger generations who want freedom from the theocratic Islamic regime. The Islamic Republic of Iran has been crushing its people with religious regulations, for example arresting women who refuse to cover their heads. Some ofthese women have died in custody after being arrested by morality police. Now women are marching in the streets refusing to wear their hijabs at great personal risk. The Islamic government took power in 1979 after overthrowing the government of the Pahlavi Dynasty. Supreme authority fell to the Grand ... |
